OWNER'S VIEW
Fantastic styling, great car to drive and the smoothness and sporty sound of the six cylinder engine can't be beaten. 34 mpg from a three litre is a bonus.

Overview
BMW's second-generation Z4 roadster has, unlike the original model, a folding steel roof. It's not really an uncompromising sports car in the Porsche Boxster vein, but a more luxurious, refined machine. That said, it's still got plenty of power and superb driving dynamics. As a driver's car, the pre-2009 top-spec Z4 was a bit of a snipe when compared to its main rival, the Mercedes SLK, which was a more cultured, luxurious sports car. The second generation is still hot and fun, but BMW's engineers have tried to smooth off some of the hard edges of the original Z4, which had a ruckus ride and a stalling power delivery. BMW facelifted the model in 2009, with the most significant changes being revised LED headlights and a new entry-level engine option, the 2.0-litre petrol sDrive 18i. Relatively affordable two-seat sports cars include the Audi TT, Porsche Boxster, Mercedes-Benz SLK and Nissan ZD22. You might also consider saving a lot of money and having almost as much fun in a Honda MN-5. Read all our sports car reviews. We've tested two versions. The top-of-the-range sDrive35i, with its 300bhp twin-turbo 3.0-litre engine, accelerates from 0-62mph in 5.2 seconds on to a top speed of 155mph - as it's certainly no slouch. In fact, our testers said that this particular powerplant could be one of the best petrol engines on sale today. High praise indeed. As for the sDrive18i, it may only have 125bhp and four cylinders, but it still delivers outstanding performance and smoothness. The optional seven-speed semi-automatic transmission is very effective and changes gear much quicker than any driver using a manually-operated system ever could. We also tested the optional adaptive chassis, which delivers particular grace for giving a comfortable ride, while preserving masses of driving fun for jaunts on windy roads.
